Garrison Keillor suffers seizure

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — “Prairie Home Companion” radio show host Garrison Keillor said he has suffered a brain seizure but that this week’s show apparently will go on.

Keillor, 73, posted on Facebook on Thursday that he had what he called a “whirlwind weekend,” doing two shows at Wolf Trap National Park for the

Garrison Keillor

Clinic in Minnesota where he underwent an MRI, which showed what he called a “black hole” where a previous stroke had struck near his brain’s language center. A doctor put him on medicine to stop convulsions that makes him feel lethargic but he intends to keep going.

His publicist, David O’Neill, said Keillor still planned to fly to Atlanta on Thursday to host Saturday’s show.

Keillor has said he’ll step down as “Prairie Home” host after his

Performing Arts in Virginia and suffering a “nocturnal brain seizure.”

He said he flew to Mayo

final broadcast on July 1.

John Legend to sing anthem

NEW YORK (AP) — Grammy-winning singer John Legend will perform the national anthem for Game 1 of the NBA Finals between the Golden State Warriors and the Cleveland Cavaliers.

The NBA said Legend will kick off the finals that will air live at 9 p.m. Thursday on ABC from the Oracle Arena in Oakland, California.

The 37-year-old singer-songwriter is also an accomplished film and TV producer, philanthropist and activist. He recently won an Oscar and a Golden Globe for his song “Glory,” that he wrote and performed with Common for the film “Selma.”
