after last night

The returned, revived, retreaded Garrison Keillor, in his first week of mornings back on KSJN, has proved to be a safety menace.

I nearly drove off the road twice yesterday morning, on the way Downtown, cracking up as Keillor began his Second Annual Chicken Music Festival, featuring chicken-themed music all the way from a 16th-century German "The Little White Chicken" to the Beatles to Mississippi John Hurt doing a song in which he spells C-H-I-C-K-E-N to Tiny Tim singing "Chickery chick."

The same sort of car trouble occurred earlier in the week as Keillor's guest, Harley Peters, U.S. Department of Agriculture Extension sex Agent, answered a listener whose problem was that he had developed an unhealthy, unnatural lust for money, particularly 50-cent pieces and dollar bills.

The sponsoring Jack's Auto Repair ("All tracks lead to Jack's") was another hazard as Jack's began its pre-Thanksgiving Christmas sale featuring such with-it merchandise as psychedelic tea cozies and bun warmers.
