

Garrison Keillor, former poet and now a public radio disc jockey, has taken to reading limericks occasionally on the air. Some are his own and some come from others. He disavowed authorship of this one and credited it to a book supplied by a listener:

There once was a lovely young miss
Who went down to the river to read.

 A young man in a punt
 Stuck an oar in her eye
And now she has to wear glasses.

